Ali Mustafa was a Toronto-based freelance photojournalist, activist and writer. He worked with a variety of organizations both in Toronto and abroad, including the Landless Workers Movement (MST) in Brazil. He later began freelancing as a photojournalist in Palestine, Egypt, and Syria. Mustafa was killed along with seven others on March 9th, 2014 in an aerial bombing while covering the news in Aleppo, Syria. He had returned to Syria to continue his work exposing the depths of a human tragedy that he believed the rest of the world could no longer afford to ignore.

Egypt: The Revolution Continues is a photo exhibition documenting the 2011 Egyptian revolution through the lens of the late photojournalist, Ali Mustafa. Mustafa lived in Cairo during the revolution and was able to document it through his photographs. The photos exhibited show millions of Egyptian protesters from a wide range of socio-economic and religious backgrounds demanding social justice, freedom and food.
