Louise Booth, an Orange County historian, is well-known for her history of Villa Park and the history of the Anaheim Union High School District. She also headed the committee of Orange County librarians to publish The Centennial Bibliography of Orange County California. In recognition of her work in local history she received the William Glassell Award and the Donald H. Pfuger Award. This book is unusual among university histories, for it highlights the achievements and adversities of a small Bible College that developed into a respected university in one of the most prominent areas of this nation.
